D * Domus, us, vel mi, f. est enim secundæ & quartæ declinationis. à δόμος græc à δέμω extruo. est enim Domus extructa omnis habitatio in qua pater familias habitat, quæ tecto & parietibus constat. Ædes autem sunt si tecto carent, neque habitantur. latior ergo est significatio Ædium quam Domus. A tenement, a dwelling house, a Temple or Church, a family or houshold, a countrey, a whole nation, a nest, a cage, a stable. Differt etiam à Domicilio, quia Domicilium est habitatio certa & fixa, in qua larem, rerumque ac fortunarum suarum summam pater familias constituit: Domus interdum est temporaria, propria, vel aliena; Sedes est possessio antiqua. Itaque vbi Domicilium ibi est Domus, at non vbi Domus ibi Domicilium quoque est semper. & Domus & Sedes alterum sine altero esse potest.

truce after battaile, alliance betweene friends, a couenant, a band, an agreement. Fœdera sunt principum, aut ciuitatum, pactiones pituatorum; but there is another difference betweene Pactio and Fœdus, for in time of warre that truce which is concluded vpon and excepted of both side for a certaine limited space of time, is properly called Pactio; we commonly call it Inducię; and it differed from Fœdus; first, because that Fœdus is a perpetuall truce or league; secondly, because it was necessarie that one of those Heralds at armes called Feciales, should by a solemne proclamation confirme this league called Fœdus; neither of which conditions was absolutly requisite in their truce termed Pactio. Sigon.& Popma inquit, Fœdus est quod iussu populi arq. senatus authoritate per Fœtialem sacerdotem solemni ritu feriebatur: Pactio est conuentio pacisscendæ amicitiæ, & societatis causa certis conditionibus firmata: Sponsio est quæ à magistratibus & imperatoribus iniussu populi fiebat, arq. deditione eorum per quos facta esset, infirmabatur. ita Fœdus Pactione, Pactio Sponsione firmior & stabilior fuit, vel Fœdus sanciebatur religione, Pactio & Sponsio firmabantur pœna, authore Capro.

D* Initium, ij. n.g. (ab ineo, id est incipio initium est principium sed aliàs quo quid incipiat, aliàs ex quo quid constet, v. Fest.) A beginning, a draught, a plat-forme. Valla, l. 5. c. 54. Principium rei maioris initium vocatur, aut initium orationis: Quinctiliano quoque testante, qui ait, Quod principium Latinè vel exordium dicitur, maiore quâdam ratione Græci videntur procemium nominasse, quod à nostris initium modo signatur. & huius verbi participium absolutè positum sine regimine maioribus rebus adhibetur, vt ineunte pueritia, ineunte adolescentia, ineunte vere, ineunte æstate, hyeme ineunte, ineunte novo anno; non autem, dormitione ineunte, convivio ineunte, die ineunte, nocte ineunte, horâ ineunte, sed incipiente: nisi dicamus illud ipsum, ineunte certis nominibus debere adiungi, quæ sunt ea quæ modo exposui. Dicitur etiam initium in sacris, vnde initiare est consecrare: vt cum dicitur, sacris initiari, vel plenius, sacrorum solemnibus initiari. Varr. l. 2. de re rust. c. 4. ab fullo genere pecoris immolandi initium primum sumptum videtur: cuius vestigia, quòd initijs Cereris porci immolantur: & quòd, initijs pacis, fœdus cum fe-tur, porcus occiditur: & quòd nuptiarum initio antiqui reges ac sublimes viri in Hetruriâ in conjunctione nuptiali nova nupta & novus maritus primum porcum immolant. Causa significationis est, quòd, qui sacris Eleusi aijs se dedebant, à cervis quibusdam ἀρχαῖε (i.e. elementis ac principijs) paulatim progredi debantur ad τὰ τέλεα. ideò initiari & τελεῖσθαι seu consummari sunt termini religionis mysticæ, atque inde factum est, vt initiare, quod est incipere consecrationem, generali significatu sit consecrare.

De litera K.

K est decima litera alphabeti Græci; ex quo in Latinum est translata, ad Græcas quasdam voces, in latino sermone scribendas, etsi eas nunc quoque vulgo per C exprimamus. Ita supra in litera C bene multa habuimus, quæ apud Græcos à K aut X (quod est K cum spiritu aspero incipiunt. Inutilem autem K putarunt, quod C eius vicem supplere posset; nisi in tribus nominibus, kaput, kalumnia, kalendæ. quum dico kaput, intelligo caput legis, non caput hominis. hoc voluit Ausonius.

Hæc tribus in Latio tantum addit nominibus K.
Prævaluit postquam Gamma vice functa prius C.

ubi videre est, in versu priore, quod veteres latini non kappa, sed ka dicebant, vt hodie: vnde krus, knus, pro karus, kanus scribebant: quia quum mutæ incipiant á se, & desinant in E, & contrà semivocales incipiant ab E & desinant in se, veteres compendij Gratiâ mutæ literæ non apponebant E, vt pote qui literam ipsam pro syllaba acciperent. itaque Bne pro bene, Ptre pro Petere dicebant. sola autem mutarum k incipit à se quidem vt reliquæ, sed desinit in A, non in E, vt ipsæ. ideò, cum syllaba ka concipienda erat, soli K contenti A omittebant. itaque Krtago, klumnia, kput, klendæ scribebant. Nam de knus, & knus, pro karus, kanus, habes apud optimum & vetustissimum Grammaticum L. Terentium Scaurum: qui addit, illa nomina non posse scribi per C. Crus, Cnus, quia inquit esse Cerus, Cenus, non Carus, Canus. veteribus ergo non minus in vsu fuit hæc litera quam C. nunc quia in vsu non est, ne longius ei insistamus, recensebimus tantum quasdam voces, quæ Latinis per k scribuntur, licet iam re verâ vix sint inter latinas habendæ.

quo multus, quod numerando multa æstimaretur. ita multare in auctionibus τὸ πλεῖστα ἐπιζητεῖν. Scalig. melius & apertius, vt mihi videtur, Martin. multaid est, quod in auctionibus addebatur ad priorem licitationem, cùm ementes inter se contenderent, & alij alios multarent pecuniâ: vt ergo πλειστηριάζειν est à πλεῖστον, quia, qui plurimum in auctionibus offert, ille emit, i. e. sumit: ita multa duci potest a multus, quoniam in disceptatione de precio, is, qui parum dat, excidit emptione: qui multum, tem indictam accipit. multus hic est, pro πλείων. & propterea dicit possit πολεῖν esse à πολὺ. primò ergo multa ea pecunia, quæ multa vel plurima penditur in licitationibus: quâ emptor plus licitans se priuat, damno se afficit, & eâ multæ quasi expositione se punit. deinde multa erit pecuniaria pœna: quæ significatio nobis hodie nota est. cæterum, si multa propriè esset pecuniaria pœna: ex adiectiuo subst. factum dixerim: quia multa, πολλὰ imponebatur, quæ numeranda erat. Becm. etiam multare à multum vbicunque enim positum inuenitur, τὸ πολὺ innuit, vt multare aliquem verberibus, Terent. multauit vsque ad mortem i.e. tam multis plagis confecit, vt de vitâ periclitaretur, itaque ne scribas cum plebe mulcta multare. quanquam hoc tolerare in rep. Latin. possit si idem sit quod frequenter mulgere à mulctum. cuius iudicium approbo, constat enim ratio metaphoræ non inelegantis, vt enim frequenter mulgendo lac agnis subducitur, ita frequentibus ζημίαις seu mulctis sanguis ille noster, pecunia scilicet.

* ‡ Numa Pompilius, was the ſecond King of the Romans, a man peaceable and ſeeming very religious in his kinde. He brought the rude people, which Romulus had employed onely in warres, to ſome good ciuilitie, and a more orderly faſhion of life: which hee effected by filling their heads with ſuperſtition, and deuices, which in his owne iudgement were no better then meere deluſions. This appeared by the bookes that were found in his graue, almoſt ſixe hundred yeares after his death, wherein the ſuperſtition taught by himſelfe was condemned as vaine. His graue was opened by chance, in digging a peece of ground that belonged to one L. Petilius A Scribe. where two coffins or cheſts of ſtone were found with an inſcription in Greeke and Latine letters which ſaid, that Numa Pompilius the ſonne of Pompo, King of the Romanes lay there. In the one coffin was nothing found: his body being vtterly conſumed. In the other were his bookes, wrapped vp in two bundels of waxe, of his owne conſtitutions ſeuen, and other ſeuen of Philoſophie: they were not onely vncorrupted, but in a manner freſh and new, which the Prætor deſiring to haue a ſight of, when hee perceiued to what they tended, refuſed to deliuer them backe to the owner, and offered to take a ſolemne oath that they were againſt the Religion then in vſe. Hereupon the Senate without any more adoe, commanded them to bee openly burnt.

Patres, trum, m. plur. Our forefathers, elders, or forefathers, the Senatours, Aldermen, and Burroughmasters of a Citie. They were first appointed by Romulus who first built Rome, who ordained an hundred of them to be chosen out of the whole number of the Commons, to consult with him of matters concerning the Commonwealth: to which did Romulus after adde another hundred, and Tarquinius Priscus, as diverse Authours testifie, made them a compleate three hundred: which they called ab authoritate patres, vel à cæte-rorum honore, with their fellows Patricij. Unto the priviledge of whose Order the Commons also were very desirous to be received. Unto Tarquinius Priscus added the second hundred to the Senate out of the Commons, who were called Senatores minorum gentium, i.e. Senatours of the lower house: and Brutus added the third hundred, that time they began to be called Patres conscripti.
